

Figure 3. Aeromagnetic map of Washington and Oregon from the compilation of Kucks (1999). Short-dashed line within Siletzia suggests refolding of originally northwest-trending structures. Arcuate trends spanning Washington/Oregon border and in the Klamath Mountains suggest indentation. Arrows indicated Straight Creek fault (top arrow) and proposed continuation into Oregon (bottom arrow).